

Kristen Galles is a civil rights attorney in the Washington, D.C. area. Her practice specializes in discrimination in education and employment, including Title IX. Kristen began her Title IX practice as a pro bono project with a large firm in 1994 and now litigates such cases nationwide. She represents students, athletes, coaches, and teachers in discrimination and retaliation cases. She has litigated cooperatively with such organizations as the National Women's Law Center, the California Women's Law Center, the ACLU, and Equal Rights Advocates.

In her capacity as co-chair of the American Bar Association Individual Rights Section committee on the rights of women, Kristen has conducted Title IX continuing legal education programs, promoted the passage of ABA policy, co-wrote the ABA's Supreme Court amicus brief in Jackson vs. Birmingham, Alabama Board of Education, and wrote the ABA's official commentary on the final report issued by the U.S. Department of Education's 2002-2003 Title IX Commission.

She serves in many legal and community organizations, including the attorney advisory committee of the AAUW's Legal Advocacy Fund.

She is a summa cum laude graduate of Creighton University and an honors graduate of Washington University School of Law (St. Louis).
